Feeling, Thinking, Doing, Being: The Increased Focus on Emotion Regulation in Cognitive-Behavioral Therapy

March 5, 2012 9:00-4:30 pm

Location: 2600 Victory Parkway

Instructor: Dr. Terri Messman-Moore, Associate Professor of Psychology, Miami University

Credit: 6.0 RCH's Social Worker , Counselor, NBCC and OPA will be awarded upon completion.

Description: In this interactive workshop, Dr. Terri Messman-Moore will present new developments in CBT, focusing on how clinical science models and research on emotion regulation can inform our understanding of psychopathology and improve therapeutic intervention. Problems with emotion regulation have been linked to a variety of clinical disorders reflecting disturbances in anxiety and mood, somatization, dissociation, disordered eating and substance misuse. In many cases, symptoms arise out of the desire to avoid negative emotional experiences, resulting in maladaptive coping behaviors or emotionally driven behaviors (EDB's), such as overeating, rumination, checking, or social withdrawal. This workshop will focus on conceptualizing treatment through identification of the functional aspects of symptoms in order to eliminate problematic behavior. Emotion-regulation interventions promote awareness of how efforts to decrease emotional suffering create barriers to achievement of desired goals and inadvertently interfere with living a value-based life. The workshop will help attendees incorporate aspects of traditional cognitive-behavioral models with acceptance-based and functional models (e.g., ACT, MBCT, and DBT). Attendees will learn how to use metaphor, stories, poetry, media, and experiential exercises to teach acceptance-based concepts.

Participants must be Clinical Service Providers and/or have a Masters Degree or higher in related behavioral health field. Basic knowledge of traditional cognitive-behavioral approaches (i.e., use of thought records, cognitive restructuring) will be assumed.
